

Steven Winters Association O&M Training Program

Training To Begin This Month!

Last month, Steven Winter Associates' (SWA) opened enrollment to their Operations & Maintenance Training Program. As you may recall, we drew your attention to this virtual course package as an additional tool to use for all of New York City building compliance requirements.

Who should participate in the training?

The training is intended for O&M staff and LL97 compliance training is also available for management staff of buildings over 25k sq ft.

Who is eligible for the training?

All portfolios are eligible regardless of building or staff size.

What is the format of the training?

The program features live webinars, custom maintenance checklists, and on-demand videos to provide your staff with the skills necessary to identify and troubleshoot building system issues.

What topics are covered during the training?

Trainers will work with building management staff to create a custom curriculum, so the content is relevant to your building's systems and maintenance needs. This includes heating, domestic hot water, cooling, air sealing, lighting, and many other systems that building staff operate and maintain daily.

What is the cost of the training program?

The cost of this training program is $450 per person. This is a 70% reduction in price thanks to funding secured by RSA and SWA from NYSERDA.

With this program members will have the opportunity to participate in over 30 live O&M trainings, led by SWA's highly qualified engineers as well as a full year of access to SWA's On-Demand videos featuring targeted and practical maintenance practices. This program has proven results, including but not limited to; improved building operations, enhanced tenant quality of life, decreased operational costs, and reduced fine exposure.
